Jaki, Remon, Papay, Niken, and Anna go out to make a short film about the lives of a village residents in the foot of a hill. Driving to the place, their car has a flat . If a restriction on car owning is introduced, to take just one example, it is much more likely that crimes will be directed at physical property. So I do find that people would rather have the income of greater freedom permanently shifted to others than to have the restrictions taken away. ----- bblough It's interesting that the most frequently cited harm is that society is "waking up to the problem". I wonder if they consider the possibility that they aren't waking up to the problem, but at least you have them thinking about it! ----- sidcool I think the solution is less disruptive technologies. The best example I can think of is Uber. They're trying to be disruptive but their effect is progressive and not disruptive. I think a better solution would be to take away existing modes of transport easily. ~~~ e12e I mean I agree with the premise of your comment, that it's better for society if large populations of people don't have direct access to cars and the assumptions they
