BIOflo monitoring system. A completely new method, based on the older ultrasound Doppler system, using a totally new computer, was investigated. The instrument, the BLOflo (Bracco, Italy) is a computer-assisted ultrasound Doppler system with a position tracking system of the probe that is equipped with an optical positioning system and an instrument for data recording and processing. This is the first instrument designed to be combined with this kind of modality. BLOflo was evaluated in the screening of cardiovascular diseases by using a new protocol for carotid and vertebral arteries. This protocol was developed in order to optimize Doppler velocity curves with few interruptions, while keeping a low operator intervention. The protocol is based on two successive scans of the artery, with a time distance of 5 s between them. With the 10 MHz probe, the optimal sampling frequency is 256 Hz (two samples per cent), in a sample time of 0.5 s. Nevertheless, a higher sampling frequency is acceptable when a reduced speed is used. The final result is a combined CW and PW Doppler curve, with a spectral display. The new protocol was applied to patients with suspected cerebrovascular disease, and was compared with the standard protocol, which has been used for more than 10 years. Our data support the feasibility and good reproducibility of the protocol. Using this protocol and the BIOflo instrument, we were able to detect all pathologies (aneurysms, stenoses, occlusions), with a sensitivity of 94.7%. We analyzed one hundred carotid and 20 vertebral arteries, with a total of 18 pathologies. It is concluded that the BIOflo instrument is a valid and a powerful instrument to be used for the screening of cere
