Field of the Invention This invention relates to locking mechanisms that are used to secure the hinged lid of a trash receptacle to the trash receptacle during the period of time that trash is being deposited into the receptacle. 2. Description of Related Art Trash receptacles are used to contain household and commercial refuse. A number of different types of trash receptacles are known, including box-like trash receptacles that have a hinged lid that is secured to the receptacle by hinges that are disposed at a first end of the lid and at a second end that is remote from the first end of the lid. Frequently, the second end of the lid is connected to the receptacle by a hinge which has a detent mechanism that is used to lock the lid in a closed position that is secured by the latch. Some hinged lids are provided with an intermediate mechanism that pivotally secures the lid to the receptacle. Examples of such a mechanism are those that are disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,113,634 and 5,642,662. In U.S. Pat. No. 5,113,634, a pair of pins engages a pin hole in a top horizontal surface of the lid, while in U.S. Pat. No. 5,642,662, a first pin is provided that engages a pin hole in a horizontal surface of the lid, a second pin is pivotally connected to the lid and is engaged with the receptacle, and a helical spring is connected between the lid and a second pin. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,773,313, a recycling container is disclosed that is provided with a top lid and a front panel that covers the front of the
