Category:Industrial buildingsDissociation of adjacent intrastrand GG- or TG-TMP-GG and TMP-GG mispairs in X-irradiated mammalian cells. To determine whether the flaky skin syndrome (or xeroderma pigmentosum complementation group A syndrome) results from a DNA-protein cross-link or a flaky skin syndrome is a variant form of xeroderma pigmentosum, the spectrum of TMP-DNA cross-linking in xeroderma pigmentosum-variant (XP-V) cells was investigated. To minimize the amount of UV-irradiated DNA repair products, X-ray irradiation was used. The ratio of the number of DNA adducts formed at GG and TG sequences was calculated from the UV dose required to form one modified nucleotide per 10(3) GG or TG bases. An X-ray dose of 300 R produced 13 X-ray-induced TMP-DNA cross-links per 10(3) GG or TG bases and one H2A-DNA cross-link per 10(5) bases. Hence, X-irradiation created approximately two X-ray-induced TMP-DNA cross-links per GG or TG base in the absence of TMP. The results indicate that there is one
